Information event aims to boost number of living kidney donors for west of Scotland

More than 250 people in the west of Scotland are currently waiting for a kidney transplant with many of those waiting up to three years for a suitable donor.

An informal information evening for people interested in becoming a live donor is being hosted by the board at Glasgow City Chambers on Monday 5 September.

Marc Clancy, consultant transplant surgeon, will host a panel of experts made up of donors, recipients, surgeons, nephrologists, and transplant co-ordinators. They will discuss the kidney donation process before inviting questions from the audience. Panel members and health board staff will be available afterwards to share more information.
