

Core brief

Thursday, 30 November 2017

Introduction

This issue brings you news of the QEUH being lit up for World Aids Day and details a visit by MSP Jeane Freeman to the RHC.

QEUH lit up red in recognition of World AIDS Day

The Queen Elizabeth University Hospital will be glowing red in support of World AIDS Day 2017. Every year on 1 December, people around the world come together to mark World AIDS Day and call for an end to HIV stigma.

Red lighting along the building symbolises the red ribbon which is the universal mark of awareness and support for those living with HIV. Click here to read more.

MSP visits Royal Hospital for Children

A service helping families of the Royal Hospital for Children to secure £5.3 million in financial support was today (Thursday, 30 November) visited by Jeane Freeman MSP, Minister for Social Security.

Our chairman John Brown CBE, in conjunction with Glasgow Children's Hospital Charity, welcomed the Minister as she visited the service which is tackling the inequality faced by families with a child being treated in the Royal Hospital for Children (RHC). Click here to read more.

Are your contact details up-to-date? Click here to check